WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

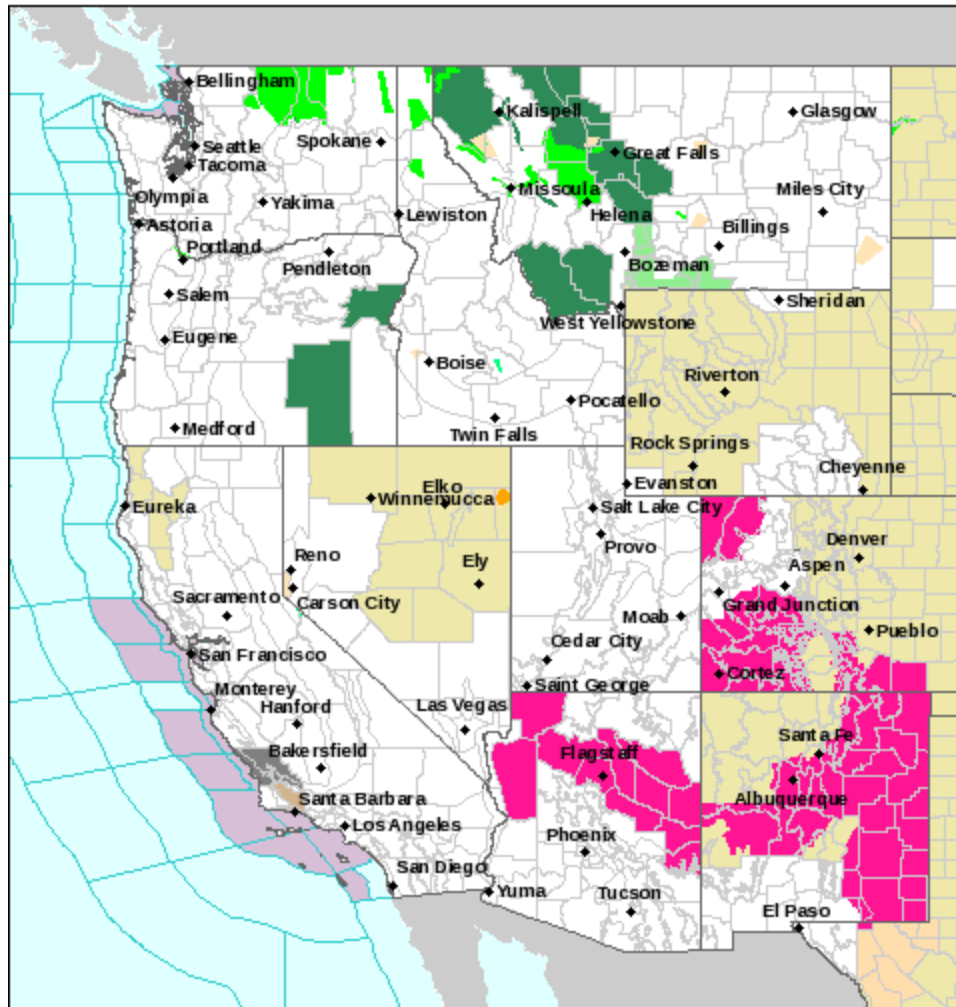

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

An unsettled weather pattern under a series of low pressure systems will move through the region over the next 7 days. Scattered, mostly northern and eastern mountain showers/isolated thunderstorms are possible into next week, most will be widespread today including the Sacramento Valley. Showers/thunderstorms will be least active on Fri/Sat and there will be little, if any, such action in the greater Bay Area on all days. Temperatures will generally remain near to a bit above seasonable values all week, with the warmest inland areas in the 80s. Areas of gusty afternoon S to W winds are expected today, and areas of gusty W to N winds on Thursday and Friday.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

An area of low pressure currently over Central California will move slowly east into Nevada Thursday and into Utah Friday. This low pressure will cause temperatures to be around 5 degrees below normal through Friday, with mid 50s to mid 60s across the mountains and upper 60s and 70s in the valleys. A weak ridge of high pressure will build toward the California Coast from the southwest causing temperatures to warm a couple degrees this weekend. Cooling will take place once again early next week as another low drops into California from the Pacific Northwest. Instability will bring isolated afternoon showers and thunderstorms to the Sierra through early next week. Westerly afternoon and evening winds of 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph will surface across the mountain ridges and desert passes through early next week.
